

Oath of Bachelor Party Secrecy and Camaraderie

This non-legally binding contract shall serve as oath of Bachelor Secrecy and Camaraderie. Bachelors unwilling or unable to take the oath shall be ridiculed, mocked and generally thought of as a puss. Bachelors should read oath aloud in the presence of witnesses with their right hand placed on stag magazine, six pack, or other symbolic bachelorhood item.

I _____ do solemnly swear to uphold the ten commandments of Bachelor Party Secrecy and Camaraderie.

1. I will treat the groom to his favorite bar drink.
2. I will support my fellow bachelors by being a wingman and helping to break up the herd and single out hot chicks, even if it means hanging out with the ugly duckling for a few minutes.
3. I will embarrass, but not humiliate, the groom as much as possible. This might include: handcuffing the groom to a blow up doll, getting women to autograph his navel, making him sing a love song in public, dressing him as a pimp, a priest or a prisoner, and finally calling attention to his loss of freedom at frequent intervals.
4. I will keep the party going with inappropriate jokes, banter, and mildly embarrassing bar tricks.
5. I will drink, act obnoxious and promote disorderly conduct. However I will refrain from being a tool, jerk, or dumbass.
6. I will not speak of work or work related topics. If I speak or even think of work, I will take a shot of tequila to squelch the thought.
7. I will flirt with strippers and girls in bars, and I will not admit it later.
8. I will have the number of a cab company or a sober friend handy at all times.
9. I will not photograph incriminating events, however I promise to photograph as many mildly embarrassing events as possible.
10. I will not reveal any of the events of the bachelor party. I work with my fellow bachelors to create a benign, yet plausible alibi to appease prying wives and girlfriends.